Every August, the University of Kentucky welcomes first-year and returning students with a week-long event known as K Week. While there is a little something for everyone, K Week especially helps incoming freshman and transfer students become acquainted with campus.

In an effort to welcome students to campus and share the exciting options we offer, UK Federal Credit Union attends many K Week events each year.

The first event of the week was the Student Center Spectacular, essentially an open house for Student Center organizations. The Spectacular was just that—given the new Student Center had just been completed. We set up several tables with giveaways, giant Jenga, Connect4 and a $100 Amazon gift card drawing.

Fast forward to Tuesday, we attended the Lex Mart event. This event is designed to introduce students to local businesses, giving us the opportunity to meet new students and give away sunglasses.

Finishing off the week was the Alumni Welcome Back Cookout, held in Alumni Plaza across from Kroger Field. With face painting, caricatures, giant Connect4 and food from Crank and Boom and Canes, the event had something for everyone. It was a fantastic way to celebrate the first day of classes and to show students and staff all the great services we have to offer!

Teaching Your Kids How to Keep the House Safe
Home safety is more than just protecting your home from outside factors. It’s protecting it from mishaps within the home as well. With the day-to-day hustle of family life, it can be easy to forget to take steps to make your home safer. Getting your kids involved is one way to feel secure around the house and can teach them the importance of a safe home. And it’s never too early to start; there are simple ways your kids can do their part every day.

Keeping an eye out
Teaching your kids to be mindful of everyday risks will help them know what to look for. Things like loose cords and liquids on the kitchen floor can cause falls that may result in injury, so make sure they know to clean up spills and tuck cords back where they don’t stick out. Putting other items away like toys, shoes, and backpacks can also help everyone avoid tripping or stepping on them.

Show your kids how electricity works, and make sure they’re careful around lamps, sockets, and outlets. Also, help them practice good kitchen safety by showing them the dos and don’ts of heat, blades, and appliances. Plus, while you want your kids to be independent, it’s useful to set boundaries for what they shouldn’t try to do by themselves. And let them know that if they need your help with a task, you’ll be there to help them out.

Preparing for the unexpected
In addition to helping your kids get a good grasp on what to do to keep your home safe, you can teach them how to keep it secure. Remind them to come get you if someone they don’t recognize comes to the door, and make sure they know to say you “can’t come to the phone” if someone calls for you while you’re unavailable. So they know they’re secure, show them what the doors and windows look like both locked and unlocked.

Another important thing to teach your kids is what to do in case of an emergency like a fire or if a parent gets hurt. Teach them how to dial 911 as well as what to say, and if your kids are old enough, practice dialing emergency contacts – just in case.
